UK Outlook for Monday 29 Mar 2021 to Wednesday 7 Apr 2021:
Rain could be persistent and heavy early next week, especially across some hills in the west. Drier in the south and very mild at times to start next week. There are signals for high pressure to build to the west of the UK later in the week, allowing colder air to spread south bringing a mixture of sunshine and showers, with these mainly in the north and east and turning wintry over hills. These cooler, showery conditions may well persist into the middle of the week. Temperatures are likely to start rather warm or warm for parts of the south and southeast, but will likely widely return back to, or rather below, average by the weekend.
